Our assignment was to read "Passing", a novel of some length and depth. Sep1

The prose in both books was simple and graceful. Ultimately, she subsumes her hopes and dreams by literal suicide, through a life of drudgery, childbearing, and the narrow social confines of rural poverty and a religion that fails to bring lasting solace. She did, though, loved to throw in a twist to her stories; the plot twist here worked better than Quicksand some of her stories as it seemed more organic.

Secret of the Blue Trunk. In addition to the objective rejection of Helga as a mixed raced child, a theme which was already common in Black literature, Larsen shows the psychology of and The Stories girl herself, her internalization of her parents' dislike, such that she can not identify for very long with either race.
