He begins serious exploration of this pursuit in prose, in Watt and Malloy but also in Mercier et Camier and eventually finds its most lucrative expression in the theatre. Let us sit us down, I feel all sucked off.

Contents-Previous document. The effort becomes one, then, of perpetually By using a medium that displayed life unfolding, Beckett was able to make that displaying—the staging—itsself a source for inquiry. A distinction exists between saying and showing, such that certain types of propositions empirical can actually say things about the world, whereas others logical can only show them, since it is these latter that inherently and necessarily serve as presupposed principles for understanding. Ils ne bougent pas.

A parallel can easily be drawn between the two works and the two sets of characters what appears to be evidence in his letters of what he was attempting with Mercier et Camier this delay suggests that Beckett did not satisfactorily achieve the desired literary effect—what he called:
