Definitely onetoreadtimeand. Whenthe diagnosis of PTSD is applied, sometimes the victims' family members and friends are often also affected due to adjustment problems such as outbreaks of anger and violence directed towards family members. In addition, the presence of social isolation, poverty, unemployment, institutional accommodation, and pain can all predict higher levels of emotional distress in victims who survive torture. Annas and Crosby reported that lawyers provided advanced confirmation that interrogators may be ordered to perform techniques they know to be inappropriate and ineffective by higher ranking officers who have not been adequately educated about effective interrogation procedures.
