We can imagine him as a lecturer in Jena or Berlin reading verse with good accentuation and even with feeling; and we know of his concern—also shared by Goethe—that the actors in Ion in Weimar should speak their lines. The real Corinne would have forgiven him this little touch of personal vanity. Ach nein, ach nein!

Thus people turned to Schlegel, younger writers, editors, publishers, despite his being in distant Coppet. Having done the busts of the Weimar notabilities and some in Munich, would Tieck not be the ideal sculptor for the Walhalla, the monument to German greatness that was to arise on the banks of the Danube near Regensburg? He was not best pleased when he heard of a Russian initiative to win Denmark for the Allied cause, with a diplomatic mission to Copenhagen.
