These questions can help you evaluate if it is a good idea for your church. Sometimes, pastors who long to see churches grow will grasp at all kinds of things, thinking it will be the difference-maker and cause the church to grow. So far precisely nothing has come of either— but there is a lot of noise inside the church against these sorts of changes, and it seems pretty clear that plenty of those same bureaucrats who are busily trying to undermine the child protection commission would roll up their sleeves to prevent the ordination of either married men to the priesthood, or women to the diaconate.

If you are significantly different than other churches in your denomination your primary target is people far from God or if you are a seeker church, then a less-denominational name may be helpful but not necessarily.
