Its meaning is uncertain but most likely to be an 'all-seeing eye', an apotrop
It is held by many deities, in particular Atum, the sun-god of Heliopolis, and when seated Sekhmet, the lion-headed war-goddess of Memphis. The human deity was depicted standing above, or seated on, his older animal form, as if it were his mount, or 'vehicle'.

We see how easily symbolic images can mean different things to different people was the form taken by the King of the Sea, Ryu-jin, who is the subject of numerous legends. It heralds the coming of spring and is therefore associated in Christian art with the Annunciation that heralded Christ's Advent.
