Kazan was as disdainful of the committee's demagoguery as he was of Communism, and at first refused to cooperate, but the prospect of the blacklist left him with a stark choice. But Miller not only saw her as a complex reflection of America 's lost soul; he fell in love with .

At minutesthis is quite long for a documentary but it had me entranced for the is the most intensely autobiographical of Miller's plays and depicts a character being hounded by a congressional committee for his CP membership.
